

THE 52ND INTERNATIONAL CHILDREN'S ART EXHIBITION

Children's art holds a special fascination. For the children who create it, it is a chance to discover a new way of expression using pencils, pastels, crayons and paint. For adults, the art of children provides a glimpse of the world of the child, a place often very different from the hurried, troubled world of the grownup. Children's art holds a freshness and honesty that many older artists struggle vainly for years to try to achieve. What is most surprising is the innate artistic sense many young artists display with little or no artistic training. It reminds us that art should first and foremost be an expression of the heart and mind, and that technique, while important, should never take precedence over the act of describing what is seen and felt.

International art contests and exhibitions provide a means for the children of the world to communicate in a way that transcends race, language and culture. With this in mind, the Biiku Bunka Kyokai (Foundation for Art Education) of Japan since 1970 has annually sponsored the International Children's Art Exhibition with the aim of building a greater understanding among the children of the world. It is hoped that by seeing the art of their counterparts in other lands, youngsters, and adults as well, will realize that there is a great deal more that they have in common than that which separates them. It seems that many in other countries share the ideals of the Foundation, for since the first contest, the number of countries participating and the number of entries received have been steadily growing and the quality of the artwork has been consistently high.

Last year, the contest drew artwork from 39 countries and over 11,000 entries of exceptionally high standards were received for judging and exhibiting. Entries for the domestic competition amounted to 100,000 reflecting the status of this contest as one of the largest in Japan; each year the judges of the contest are pleasantly surprised at the originality of the pieces received.

This year we take great pleasure in announcing the 52nd International Children's Art Exhibition. We look forward to receiving the continued corporation and support from children and teachers throughout the world that have made the contest such a success in the past.
